

The Best of The Daisy Cutter Vol.1

Daisy Cutter launched in January 2011 as a football parody website publishing exclusive, and entirely made-up, stories. It was initially read by twenty people, only three of whom did so willingly. We soon after realised that satirizing a game that had Sepp Blatter in charge and offered a decent living to Joey Barton was an utterly pointless endeavor and so gradually evolved into our present incarnation; a unique daily magazine that provides a platform for some of the finest writers around, has over 25 new features and articles a week, and a loyal readership in the hundreds of thousands. The Cutter has been described as both an internet phenomenon by a respected industry publication and that Grass Cutter blog by my dad. It has received praise from the PFA and outright scorn from a well-known Premier League chairman. It has fallen smitten at the feet of greats and taken cheap pot-shots at Andy Townsends warty face. Whether its a loving tribute to Subbuteo, mourning the passing of a legend, or railing against the games inept authorities each and every contribution to the Cutter is written from the heart, by someone who is as obsessed and besotted by this gloriously flawed game as you are. Here, collected together for the first time, are some of the Cutters finest cuts.
