

Full Circle: Lost and Found in the Ring of Adoption

What are you looking for? I asked Gigi as she enthusiastically sniffed at a patch of grass. A gentle tug at the leash and we moved on into the chilly night air. As we walked, I thought about the tiny black-haired baby Id left behind so long ago, sleeping peacefully in her little white crib, one among a row of little white cribs. A halo encircled the round moon, luminous and angelic. My gaze filtered through the frosty puffs of my breath rising toward the winter sky. As I studied the light and shadows of that beautiful moon--its territory both known and unknown--I said to it, You know where my daughter is! Gigi chimed in with a yelp, finding it perfectly reasonable to join in conversation with the moon. Then a feeling swept over me, strong and sure as night turns into day: My daughter is close by. I just know it. If I could just yell loudly enough across Interstate 25, she might hear me. Somehow, that big, mysterious moon with the ring around it told me my search would soon come full circle.
