Egypt, 1925: the Muslim world is in turmoil over Mustapha Kamal Atatürks proposal to abolish the caliphate in Turkey. The debate over Islam and politics re-ignites as traditional political systems dissolve under pressure from European powers and most Muslim countries lose their sovereignty. Into this debate enters Ali Abdel Razek, a religious cleric trained at Al-Azhar University, arguing in favour of secularism in his essay Islam and the Foundations of Political Power, translated here and published in paperback for the first time. Scholarly features include a substantial introduction that places the essay in its context and explains its impact. An appendix of Razeks sources with full publication details. Explanatory notes beside Razeks original footnotes. Additional notes about particular people, events or vocabulary that may be unfamiliar to modern readers.
