

The Earth is the Lords: A collection of essays on creation

A collection of essays by members of the Society of Ordained Scientists: The Society of Ordained Scientists was formed in 1987, under the leadership of Arthur Peacocke, to act as a focus for fellowship, prayer, and mutual support, among a small group of scientists who were also priests. From that small beginning it has grown to nearly 200 members and associates, distributed over most continents and embraces many of the different strands and denominations of the Christian faith. Despite the wide geographical spread the members attempt to meet, either locally in chapters, or at one of the annual provincial gatherings in UK or the USA. This society has also developed a sense of serving the community by making its expertise available to a wider audience. This collection of essays is the outcome of this desire, and shows by its very variety the wide spread of interests and perspectives on the environment. These essays are offered to the societies members and friends, and to the wider church, and indeed beyond, to share, to inform, to generate discussion. Take them, read them, and pray for the world that is in our care, and the need to reflect its divine origin.
