Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: ... doubt that his preparation for the task will have been enlarged, by a perusal of the forewords of our Bro. Rvlands. The names of the Members and Visitors, together with all that can be gleaned from any known source, with regard to either the one or the other, are given in distinct sections. The Signs of the Houses where the Lodges met, from which there were Visitors, whose names by the way were not always entered in the records of the Society--are also tabulated, and among them are three, that cannot be identified in any list, and were presumably the outer tokens of taverns at which Lodges assembled that were not on the regular establishment. The plates showing the jewels of the Society, the facsimiles of -The Fundamental Constitution and Orders, and other material portions of the Manuscript, are worthy of all praise. Although the Society of Musical Brethren was not a Lodge, its records nevertheless contain the only fragments that have come down to us of anything in the n.iAure of what is ordinarily called Lodge history, in the southern kingdom, between the passing of Old Regulation XIII., forbidding the making of Masters in private Lodges, and the repeal of this enactment in November 1725. It will have been seen that the Masonic Customs of the Society were by no means restricted to the qualification for membership being an ability to participate in Craft fellowship. The President and Censors were Master and Wardens respectively, and the first election of officers after the original formation of the brotherhood, was held on the Day of St. John the Baptist, being the Annual Festival (and Assembly) of the Grand Lodge. The making of Masons: was also pract...
