

How I Listed and Sold My House Without an Agent

In How I Listed and Sold My House Without an Agent, author Liz Stauffer tells the story of how she took on the marketing, listing and showing responsibilities of selling her own home. Despite having no formal training as a real estate agent, Liz was able to land a buyer at a high price in a matter of weeks. The result is that she kept thousands of dollars in profits that would normally have been paid to a listing agent. This is not a do-it-yourself book or a step-by-step guide while Liz recounts her specific story, she offers opinions and ideas on how and why this process worked for her. The final chapter lays out the key points that she believes helped make the sale happen. If you've thought about selling a house yourself, you may find this quick read a worthwhile investment, as it could help you decide to sell your home yourself with the potential of keeping thousands in additional profits. Alternatively, you could learn the effort required doesn't fit your personality or circumstances, thus saving you hours of valuable time and heartache. Liz Stauffer can be found on the Web at www.improbablemillionaire.com, where she tells her improbable story of moving from relative poverty to an early retirement that's been filled with second careers, travel, and wonderful learning experiences. Her first novel, Thursday Morning Breakfast (and Murder) Club, is available on Amazon.com and elsewhere.
