

The Little Boy At My Door

The little Boy At My Door is the all too familiar story about a child, abandoned by parents who are addicts and spending time in and out of jail. It is essentially a picture book geared toward the two to six year old. It is written on a level that two and three year olds can understand it if it is read to them properly. I wanted to show the sadness, but also, the hope. I want to teach children that all families are not the same. Thus, in the book the children will see a caucasian looking Grandmother; a dark foster mom; parents that are a racially mixed couple and the boy himself who is mixed. I wanted to show that a child can be nurtured to feel good about him or herself. That with love and understanding, a child's natural personality and abilities will become apparent. I also wanted to show that a child like this is a gift to the foster/adoptive parent. And if handled correctly, that child will come to see the foster/adoptive parent as a gift of love that will never change. The book is also helpful to children of traditional families who may have questions such as: why their friend looks so different from his or her foster/adoptive family. It will help instill qualities like understanding, acceptance and caring. I wrote this book based on my own, recent experience in becoming a grandmother for the first time. My grandson came to us by way of foster care to adoption. My next book will be based on this one. However; it will be all text and more in depth. Im gearing it to children ages seven through tweens.
