Although 12-year-old Anny and Scout Bradford are identical twins, the resemblance ends with their blond hair and blue eyes. Scout is outdoorsy, good at all things athletic, and a dedicated Girl Scout. Anny is different, very different. She sees things that other people don't. Most grownups think she's crazy or lying--even her own family. Everyone, including Anny, wonders what's wrong with her. When Anny sees a startling vision of a warrior on a trip to the Navajo Nation, once again, no one believes her--no one except her close friend, Eric Larson. He knows what it's like to be misunderstood--he's deaf. Anny senses her vision has something to do with lost treasure, an unexplained fire, and two visiting archaeologists. She and Eric set out to convince Scout and their friend, Ben Lapahie, that the mysterious warrior is real. But is he good or evil? Is he leading them to the answers to the location of the treasure and who set the fire or to an untimely end?
