

On Becoming an Indian Muslim: French Essays on Aspects of Syncretism

This selection of fifteen essays by modern French intellectuals in translation is a sequel to Garcin de Tassys Muslim Festivals in India (first published in the 1830s) and translated by M. Waseem (OUP, 1995). The focus of this collection is religious syncretism: how at the popular level, when Islam first came to India, may un-Islamic elements derived from Hinduism (some even at variance with Islam's normative and canonical aspects) came to be accepted as part of the practice of Islam on the subcontinent. Relying on literary and other texts as well as field studies, well-known French scholars—such as Louis Massignon, Jules Bloch, Jean Filliozat, Charlotte Vaudeville, Françoise Mallison, Denis Matringe, Marc Gaborieau, and Dominique-Sila Khan among others—trace the various ways in which Islam found popular support at the grass-roots level in India. The essays focus on the significant contributions of the Indian mystic Kabir, Sufism, Dara Shikoh, Jayasi, Pir Shams, Waris Shah, Ghazi Miyan, Ramdeo Pir, the Bharthari Jogis of Gorakhpur and Mahatma Gandhi. The concluding essay is by the translator himself and focuses on the followers of the Agha Khan, otherwise known as the Ismaili Khojas. M. Waseem's translations of all the essays is clear and precise, and his substantive Introduction outlines the gradual amalgamation of different religious elements during the spread of Islam as described by these French intellectuals.
