Pregnancy is the carrying of a fetus or embryo in the womb of a woman. The term embryo means the developing offspring during the first 8 weeks following conception while the term fetus is used from about 2 months of development until birth. The Trimesters of Pregnancy: Human pregnancy consists of three trimester periods: 1. The first trimester carries the highest risk of miscarriage (natural death of embryo or fetus) 2. The second trimester, the development of the fetus can be more easily monitored and diagnosed. 3. The third trimester often approximates the ability of the fetus to survive outside of the uterus. Birth of A Baby The story of a Pregnancy starts with the Fertilization of the egg and ends with the birth of the Baby.

Fertilization The procedure that leads to pregnancy happens earlier usually in the fallopian tube when the female egg is penetrated by the male sperm following the act of sexual intercourse. This process is referred to as fertilization or conception.

Implantation in the womb The fertilized egg then travel down the fallopian and implant itself into the inner lining of the womb or uterus. Once implanted in the uterus the embryo will grow to become a fetus at 2 months before coming out of a normal pregnant mothers womb at 38 weeks from conception to become a newborn baby. Growth of the embryo

After implantation into the lining of the womb, the embryo secretes a hormone named human chorionic gonadotropin which in turn stimulates the corpus luteum in the womans ovary to produce progesterone. The progesterone act to maintain the lining of the uterus so that the embryo will continue to be nourished by the glands in the lining of the uterus. The capillaries will be stimulated to grow from the wall of the uterus to form the placenta which allows the embryo to receive vital nutrients from the womans blood supply.

The umbilical cord will join the embryo or fetus to the placenta which allows nutrient uptake, waste elimination, and gas exchange via the mothers blood supply.
