

Resurrecting the Body: Feminism, Religion, and Psychotherapy

One woman's journey from abstract thinking toward a philosophy grounded in the body, in human relatedness. The author finds in Freudian & in feminist theory a commitment to concrete experience, to the body, & to community that religious theories of reality lack. Chapters: the cultural context in which we do theory; reflection on the sexuality of sport; thoughts on identify from a Jewish feminist atheist; archetypal theory & the separation of mind & body; rereading Jung's Memories . . . ; the talking cure of feminism & psychoanalysis; religious notions in the convergence of psychoanalysis & feminism; & the return of the Goddess.
