

Cold Dishes for Hot Weather

Cold Dishes for Hot Weather was originally published in 1896. When the hot midsummer months come, who is it that does not feel a repugnance for hot food, and whose palate does not demand something delicate yet cold? All the recipes given are for dishes to be eaten cold; many of them require no cooking, as canned and preserved goods may be used in their preparation, although fresh meats and vegetables are always preferable; and all can be prepared in the cool morning hours, before the sun's rays make life hardly bearable. The authors believe that the recipes given will be for their fragrance and taste welcome, but they leave to the artistic ability of the cook to garnish the different dishes as to make them pleasing to the sight.
