

The Longest Hole

If you like daft beggars like those characters in the TV series Last of the Summer Wine then this could be just the sort of read you are looking for. It doesn't matter one iota if you're not into golf because the characters in this story don't know much about it either! The story is short and sweet - ideal for a rainy day - with plenty of humour along the way to give you a good chuckle, as our middle-aged farm hands, John, George and Reg have a go at the difficulties of proper golf just like many, many other beginners - only these are no ordinary beginners. With very mixed personalities, it isn't going to be an easy journey as the game of golf is full of frustration as it's not as easy as it looks. Written in TWO versions, one in plain English, the other with the Suffolk dialect thrown in for those of you who like the added flavour of an accent. You'll soon be chuckling away with the antics of these three old farming boys. One story, two versions. Version 2 follows on directly after Version 1. Here is a sample with the added accent if you desire ... John held his hand over his mouth to hide his grin, while Reg just burst out laughing He-he-he that lump of duff went further than ya ball, George he-he-he! Alroight, alroight, laugh all ya loike, but that was just me practise swing, weren't it What ! said John? That weren't no practise swing, yew said yew were gonna clobber it and yew went for it loike oi don't know what! Yew know oi int used one othese clubs afore oi hed thave a practise swing fust, dint oi! But your ball still moved Only six foot that int gonna make any difference, is it!
